Title: Development and feasibility of a wearable infant wrist band for the objective measurement of physical activity using accelerometry

Reviewer's report:

This is an interesting paper which examines the feasibility of an accelerometer for use in infants 3-24 months old. The paper is well written and would be of interest to researchers examining physical activity in young children. I have one small comment which the authors should consider.

Briefly, the authors are using qualitative and quantitative methods to examine the acceptability of the device among mother-child dyads. Since open-ended answers were allowed to the questions asked of mothers, did the authors use a qualitative analysis strategy for developing themes from the responses? If there were few instances of open-ended responses to these questions, then this comment can be disregarded as long as all individual responses are reported in the paper.
