Title: Using a Community-Engaged Research (CEnR) Approach to Develop and Pilot a Photo Grid Method to Gain Insights into Early Child Health and Development in a Socio-economic Disadvantaged Community

Version: 0 Date: 27 Aug 2017

Reviewer: Simon Denegri

Reviewer's report:

This is well-written and straightforward narrative on the development of a new research methodology for community engagement where this community is 'hard to reach' or marginalised. I felt there was one improvement that could be made to the paper and one omission.

The improvement: on page 9 the authors give a useful account of why other research methodologies were problematic for the task in hand. I feel that this discussion - or some reference to it - could be introduced earlier.

The omission for me was that the authors do not really comment on whether the results of the project using the new method would be considered valid/robust (which is the criticism of some of the other alternative research methods).

I think others in the field will find it helpful to see and examine this innovation in community engagement.
