Reviewer's report:

I feel that this research is valuable and has the added depth of being reviewed by peers so gives an insight into the study that would not otherwise be available. With an increasing lack of mental health services available in the UK using technology is a positive step forward for those that are comfortable using Skype etc in order to access some support. This could also help to reduce waiting times for support that may otherwise take months to access.

The article was interesting to read and I have no amendments to make other than the missing figures, tables etc to be included.
